

1. Reflect on yourself as a learner. Think of a time recently when you were REALLY engaged in learning medicine. What were some characteristics of that learning opportunity? (Who was with you? What type of issue was presented? What was the environment you were in? Was there a teacher and if so what were the characteristics of that person that made this so engaging?)

2. Reflect again on yourself as a learner. Think of a time in your medical career when you WERE NOT engaged in learning even though it was an important topic to you. What were characteristics of that learning opportunity? (e.g. who were you with, what type of problem was presented, what were characteristics of the teacher, what was the environment?)

3. Reflect on situations in which you are most comfortable teaching: I am in my element teaching _____(what, when, who, where).

4. Describe teaching situations that make you uncomfortable: I prefer not to teach _____(what, who, where, when). Why?

Extra Credit: Think of a famous person (famous teacher, movie character, historical figure) that exemplifies your group's approach to teaching. _____
